Dr. William Chávez is a graduate of Ross University, School of Veterinary Medicine.

A Miami, Florida native, he returned to Miami upon graduation and worked there for his first twelve years as a veterinarian.

Dr. Chávez initially worked as an associate veterinarian in an exclusively avian and exotic practice for the first six years, and later opened his own Avian and Exotic medical facility called Bird & Exotic Wildlife Hospital.

After six years of owning his own practice, Dr. Chávez decided a change was in order, and turned to relief veterinary medicine to create more time for other aspects of veterinary medicine such as teaching and research.

Dr. Chavez has been associated with the teaching programs offered at the Association of Avian Veterinarian's annual conference for nearly ten years.

Dr. Chávez continues to live and work in Miami as well as spending extended periods of time practicing relief veterinary medicine in the Los Angeles area for the past six years.
